Trinity's Self-Help Center offers free legal assistance ...

Self-help centers in state trial courts are removing economic barriers that prevent access to our courts.

Self-represented litigants are a permanent and growing portion of the court's user base, as such, they represent a challenge to the courts, which have traditionally been structured to resolve disputes in which parties are represented by attorneys who understand and are familiar with the law and procedural rules.

Trinity Superior Court is committed to improving access to justice for those litigants who cannot afford to hire an attorney or who choose to represent themselves in court. The Access to Justice and Family Law Center is a place for self-represented litigants to go to receive needed legal information prior to taking their matter to court.

The Center is supervised by a Family Law Facilitator / Self-Help Attorney. The attorney and other court staff are available to provide guidance to court users with legal proceedings and terminology, assist with completing legal forms and offer referral services as needed.
